

1.9.2024
 - add parm rind while simmering
 - couple of handfuls baby spinach towards end to wilt.

- made often during quarantine 2020 - km

quick pasta and chickpeas

OCTOBER 5, 2017

ADVERTISEMENT - CONTINUE READING BELOW

SERVINGS: 2 TO 3, PETITELY; 1 TO 2, GENEROUSLY TIME: 20 MINUTES SOURCE: ADAPTED, JUST A LITTLE, FROM VICTORIA GRANOF

Want to amp it up a little? Use the broth from freshly cooked chickpeas instead of water (although I promise it won't be one-note if you only use water because this recipe is magic). You could also add a parmesan rind to the cooking liquid (although this would negate the vegan/vegetarian label). I've written it below with the finishing oil the way I like it, but I approach this by holding back a little bit of the recommended garlic and oil and saving it for the end. Should you want to make it as Granof originally wrote it, you'll want 3 cloves of garlic and 4 tablespoons of oil to begin; the dish is finished with additional olive oil only.

* DOUBLE RECIPE
 & add one extra cup of pasta
 (I used wagon wheels)

2 tablespoons olive oil

2 cloves garlic, peeled and smashed

3 tablespoons tomato paste - use entire little can when doubling

1 teaspoon kosher salt, plus more to taste

Freshly ground black pepper or red pepper flakes, to taste

1 1/2 cups cooked chickpeas (from one 15-ounce can, drained and rinsed) - save chickpea water & add to recipe

1/2 cup (2 ounces or 55 grams) uncooked ditalini pasta (or another small shape; I use annellini)

2 cups (475 ml) boiling water (update: actually I just use tap, not boiled, water)

TO FINISH

* def make lots of crispy garlic *